SANGIN, Afghanistan — A task force led by 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute Infantry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., garnered invaluable information and equipment related to an ambush that left two U.S. servicemembers dead and one seriously injured.

The mission of Operation Resolute Strike — conducted Tuesday and Wednesday in the affluent southern Afghanistan city of Sangin by 82nd Airborne Division paratroopers, Special Forces operators and criminal investigation task force members — was two-fold: to find intelligence and the pepe-

Avoid becoming a heat casualty

Hot weather tips to prevent serious injury, death

Story by Spc. Debralee P. Crankshaw
11th Public Affairs Detachment

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — With warm weather here, soldiers need to be concerned with the conditions the heat may cause.

The three main injuries a soldier should be concerned with are heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

The symptoms of heat cramps include muscle cramps, involving less than the whole muscle mass, primarily abdomen, legs, and arms.

Heat exhaustion usually involves fatigue, nausea, dizziness, fainting, vomiting, disorientation, irritability and elevated temperature.

A heat stroke has the same symptoms, but is more severe and can be fatal.

Drinking water is one of the best ways to avoid becoming a heat casualty.

The amount of water you need to drink is based on the heat category. This is determined by the Wet Bulb Global Temperature index, which uses three thermometers to determine the heat index.

After the heat index is determined, soldiers should use the Rest/Work chart to determine how much work and rest they should take and how much water they should drink. The chart also tells how much work and rest a soldier should take while doing light, moderate and heavy work.

"A person working inside doesn't have to drink as much as someone outside on detail," said Sgt. Rommel Tawatao, preventive medicine specialist, 791st Preventive Medicine Detachment.

Drinking water is important, but sol-

Saddam's not our responsibility

WASHINGTON – The United States, not Syria, is responsible for making sure Saddam Hussein and other top leaders of his regime don't escape Iraq by crossing the border into Syria, a top Syrian diplomat said Thursday.

"The United States Army has secured the Iraqi borders with Syria since the early days of this conflict," said Imad Moustapha, Syria's deputy ambassador to United States, in an interview with CNN. "They are the ones that are controlling those borders. Let them decide who ... they want to go into Syria or stay in Iraq."

Moustapha also said speculation that Syria might offer haven to members of the deposed Iraqi leadership and their families is "being used by forces that are hostile to Syria just to try to tarnish Syria's image." However, when asked directly if Syria would give Saddam refuge, Moustapha would only say, "We are not interfering in this conflict."

We are only supporting the people of Iraq, not the government of Iraq."

Coalition makes key advances in northern Iraq

NORTHERN IRAQ – Kurdish pesh merga fighters, backed by U.S. Special Forces, easily seized the oil-rich northern city of Kirkuk on Thursday, while coalition warplanes pounded deposed President Saddam Hussein's hometown and Iraqi leaders in Mosul offered to surrender.

In Baghdad, which U.S. Central Command characterized as "still an ugly place," U.S. troops skirmished with remaining Iraqi forces and were attacked by a suicide bomber.

A battalion from the 173rd Airborne Brigade has reinforced U.S. Special Forces and Kurdish forces in Kirkuk. Maj. Gen. Stanley McChrystal said at Thursday's Pentagon briefing.

"Truckload after truckload" of Kurds flooded into the city after the U.S.-backed pesh merga — ethnic Kurdish guerrilla fighters — entered the city without a shot being fired by Iraqi defenders, who had apparently headed south toward Tikrit, a Baath Party stronghold and Saddam's birthplace.

Kurds dominated the scene in Kirkuk's central square, where they jubilantly followed in the footsteps of Iraqis from the south to Baghdad by toppling a statue of Saddam — this one in tribal garb — and dancing on its broken pieces.

Celebration, resistance in Baghdad

BAGHDAD – While many in the Iraqi capital celebrated the fall of Saddam's regime, U.S. forces fought what coalition officials called "pockets of resistance" throughout the day Thursday.

One Marine was killed and 22 wounded in a firefight at a mosque where U.S. Marines had learned senior Iraqi leaders might be meeting, said Capt. Frank Thorp, a Central Command spokesman.

Shortly before 8 p.m. (12 p.m. EDT), a suicide bomber walked up to a military checkpoint in central Baghdad and detonated explosives, wounding four U.S. Marines and killing himself, a Marine spokesman told CNN.

U.S. military officials told CNN they're concerned about such tactics from Iraqi "irregular" fighters and people from other countries who might have responded to Saddam's call for a "jihad."

With most Iraqi officials out of sight, there was no word of Iraqi civilian casualties Thursday.

The latest figures, two days old, were 1,252 Iraqi civilians killed and 5,103 injured, Abu Dhabi TV reported, citing Iraq officials. Baghdad did not release military casualty figures.

Since Operation Iraqi Freedom began 105 U.S. and 31 British troops have been killed.

Security plea for huge aid effort

KUWAIT CITY – Aid agencies want U.S. and British troops to provide security for "the world's biggest humanitarian operation" — the distribution of food and essential supplies to millions of Iraqis.

World Food Program spokeswoman Antonia Paradelo told CNN Thursday the law and order situation in Iraq, particularly in the center and south, had disintegrated with no respect for personal property.

CNN's Christiane Amanpour reported that widespread lawlessness and looting in Baghdad and Basra had seriously hampered aid efforts — with military commanders saying they did not have enough troops for policing efforts.

Paradelo said: "We would like to see the situation stabilize and we would like to see troops fulfilling their responsibilities under the Geneva Convention."

What was needed, she said, was security on the ground at city and town level for when food was taken to the warehouses and distributed to 44,000 food and flour agents to give food rations to the Iraqi people.

Doubt and fear in Arab world

LONDON– While TV pictures show some Iraqis dancing on the fallen icons of Saddam Hussein, many onlookers from Arab nations remain uneasy about the transition in Iraq.

The media in neighboring countries expressed caution and suspicion at the sight of U.S. soldiers rolling their tanks into the center of Baghdad and hoisting the American flag on a statue of Saddam in Firdos Square.

That image — before the soldier replaced it with an Iraqi flag — dominated the front pages of newspapers in the region. Arab television at the time referred to it as a "mistake," saying it "sent the wrong picture."

Oil prices tumble

NEW YORK - Oil prices fell nearly 5 percent Thursday, the biggest one-day drop since the start of the war, as Kurdish fighters took control of the oil-rich city of Kirkuk in northern Iraq, easing fears of damage to Iraqi oil fields.

Light crude oil for May delivery fell $1.39, or 4.8 percent, to $27.46 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. London Brent blend crude oil eased 82 cents to $24.48 a barrel.

U.S.-backed Kurdish fighters took control of Kirkuk, near the northern oil fields. In the South, an advisor to General Tommy Franks told Reuters that the Southern oil fields could be pumping 200,000 to 800,000 barrels-per-day within 15 weeks.

Also weighing on prices was a report from the West's energy watchdog, the International Energy Agency, saying a backlog of extra OPEC crude is poised to reach importing countries in the second quarter, the weakest period for demand.

OPEC, which raised output before the war to prevent a price spike, is now considering whether to cut production quotas or simply seek to eliminate excess supply at a proposed emergency meeting planned for later this month or early in May.

Union workers hold American flags in support of the U.S. military efforts in Iraq, Thursday, during a rally near Ground Zero in New York.

Rally at Ground Zero for troops

NEW YORK - Thousands of labor union workers crowded along the western edge of Ground Zero Thursday to show their support for U.S. troops and the war against Iraq.

Police said 25,000 people, including electrical workers, carpenters, ironworkers, firefighters and police officers, attended the gathering.

Some in the crowd carried photographs of friends and relatives killed in the World Trade Center attacks. Others wore yellow ribbons and chanted "U-S-A! U-S-A!"

New York Gov. George Pataki praised the U.S. troops in Iraq.

"Some of you may have seen yesterday in Baghdad a picture of a statue of that evil dictator being toppled and dragged through the streets by Iraqis," Pataki said to the cheering crowd. "Let's melt it down. Let's bring it to New York and let's put it in one of the girders that's going to rise over here as a symbol of the rebuilding of New York and the rebuilding of America."

Congress nears agreement on unusual tax cut deal

WASHINGTON - After weeks of tough negotiations, House and Senate lawmakers neared an unusual budget agreement that will allow up to $550 billion in new tax cuts over the next 10 years.

The House prepared to pass the bill Thursday night, lawmakers said.

Senate action is expected by week's end, but several senators are still reviewing the deal.

The unorthodox agreement — which essentially sticks a place holder in the budget resolution for up to $550 billion in tax cuts but delays until later this year the tough negotiations over their exact size — was reached after moderate Republicans in the Senate bucked their leadership and insisted on a tax cut less than the $726 billion President Bush had requested.

In fact, the agreement allows the moderate senators to vote for a tax cut no more than $350 billion — the number they wanted — when the tax cut comes to the floor in the coming months.

CDC 'very concerned' SARS could spread in workplace

ATLANTA - Federal officials said Thursday the new respiratory virus that began in Asia may have spread for the first time in a workplace in the United States.

Dr. Julie Gerberding, head of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said a suspected SARS virus patient who became ill after traveling to Asia may have infected a co-worker in Florida.

Gerberding said she was "very concerned" about the possible spread of the disease and said the Florida case is being investigated.

The case is in the Gainesville area. A 47-year-old woman is believed to have been infected at work by a 60-year-old woman who was the county's first suspected SARS case, said Tom Belcuore, director of the Alachua County health department. The older woman had recently traveled to Asia.

A SARS case outside close contacts could cause health officials to consider stronger measures for controlling the disease, but Gerberding said the Florida transmission hasn't been proven yet.

Diet doctor Atkins critical after fall

NEW YORK - Dr. Robert Atkins, promoter of a popular but controversial high-protein, low carbohydrate diet, was in critical condition in a New York hospital Thursday with severe head injuries after slipping on an icy sidewalk.

Spokesman Richard Rothstein said Atkins, 72, fell on Tuesday morning near the Atkins Center for Complementary Medicine in Manhattan.

"He did bang his head on the concrete, he did suffer severe head trauma and they did have to perform surgery to relieve the pressure," Rothstein said.

Rothstein said doctors described Atkins' condition as "very serious" and that he was in critical condition. Atkins fell on the sidewalk, which was still icy after an unusual spring snowstorm that hit the New York region on Monday.

CRITTER OF THE WEEK:

Tick

By Capt. Cory Campora
791st Preventive Medicine Detachment

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — Servicemembers may want to double check themselves next time they shower.

While not common, there are ticks present on base, and there has been at least one tick found on a soldier in the last month.

Ticks are critters of medical concern since there are a variety of diseases that they may transmit to humans. If a tick is discovered, don't panic. Not every tick is necessarily carrying a disease.

To remove the tick, grasp the tick as close to where its mouthparts are embedded in your skin with tweezers and pull slowly and steadily straight outward.

The assistance of a buddy or medic may be needed if the tick is in a compromising location.

After the tick is removed, the spot where it was feeding should be checked over the following week for any signs of infection or symptoms of disease. If anything unusual appears, seek medical attention immediately.

The tick should be brought to the preventive medicine detachment so that it may be sent for species identification.

Soldiers may greatly decrease their chances of acquiring a tick by treating their uniforms with Permethrin and keeping the pant legs of their uniform tucked into their boots.

Uniform treatment kits may be obtained from the base preventive medicine detachment.

 trators of the March 29 ambush, and to deny sanctuary and remove weapons and ammunition used by anti-coalition forces.

According to Lt. Col. Richard Clarke, task force 3-504th PIR commander, the operation was a success on both counts.

“We’re gathering a significant amount of information about this ambush that may help lead others to find the perpetrators/attackers during this ambush,” Clarke said after the first day of the operation. “What we’ve done so far is recover a significant amount of small arms, mortar rounds, mortar tubes and anti-tank mines. Most importantly, we recovered bomb-making materials, to include some old C-4, and explosive devices that could have been used against coalition forces later.”

At the end of the operation, a large cache of AK-47s, RPG launchers and other small arms weapons were taken by U.S. forces. Also, more than 240 pounds of ammunition used with mortars, RPGs and small arms were seized and destroyed by 731st Explosive Ordnance Disposal Company members.

When the convoy moving outside of Sangin was ambushed March 29, the equipment used by the three U.S. casualties was left behind in the rush to evacuate them to safety. One of the key goals of Operation Resolute Strike was to get that equipment back.

“It looks like we’ve recovered one weapon and we’re in the process of recovering additional materials from the ambush against coalition forces,” Clarke said.

Capt. Del Monroy, battalion intelligence officer, said the overwhelming show of force used in the operation was critical to the mission’s success.

While the paratroopers established a containment area around the city and Special Forces operators swept the city for suspects and intelligence, close air support aircraft buzzed overhead as another reminder of American power. Air Force A-10s and F-16s, Marine Corps Harriers and Army Apache helicopters were ever-present throughout the course of the operation. During the night, a steady barrage of illumination mortars were fired to remind local residents the U.S. was still in town.

“The influence that we were able to bring here had a lot to do with the success here,” Monroy said. “I didn’t think we would get any of the U.S. equipment back.”

The show of force was enough to convince a government official from the Helmond province – of which Sangin is a member of – to bring forth several witnesses and people who had picked up the U.S. equipment after the ambush.

Qualified personnel and members of the criminal investigation task force questioned more than 50 local residents who might have had knowledge of the ambush. Out of that crop, four were flown to a Kandahar Air Field collection point for further questioning.

diers also need to ensure they don’t consume too much.

“Proper hydration is very important. A person should consume no more than 12 quarts a day and 1 ½ quarts an hour. It is detrimental to you, if you drink too much water because you lose electrolytes,” said Tawatao.

What a soldier consumes can make them more susceptible to injuries.

“Warm food and drink and foods that are difficult to digest cause someone to be more prone to becoming a heat casualty,” said Tawatao.

Afghanistan's youth look to the future

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — Going to the movies, playing sports and studying with friends have been routine activities for teenagers and college students for many years. This is a way of life for most, but after years of oppression they are new-found freedoms for the youth of Afghanistan.

“When the Taliban was in power, they instituted many rules and restrictions that limited what we could do, say and even think. Our way of life was much different before, and it’s getting back to normal now,” said Farhad Mirzazada, a university student from Kabul.

“This is my first time in Afghanistan in 13 years,” said Mirzazada. “My family moved to Pakistan to escape from the wars. I have only childhood memories of my country.”

According to the 18-year old college freshman, people are slowly starting to go back to a state of normalcy, and young people are enjoying life again.

“Unlike many Afghan people my age, I was fortunate enough to grow up in a place where I had the freedom to go to school and study what I wanted,” said Mirzazada. “Now that the fighting has stopped and the Taliban is gone, young people — men and women — can begin the lives they were meant to live.”

Although some remnants of the Taliban’s regime can still be seen in dress, education and customs, Mirzazada said their influence is slowly fading away.

“The burqa was mandated by the Taliban. Women in Kabul are not required to wear them,” said Mirzazada. “As you walk through the city, you will see many young women wearing regular shirts, pants and jeans with their faces uncovered. This is they way our culture has always been.”

Probably one of the most exciting things for Afghan teenagers and young adults is the reinstatement of higher education.

“More and more men and women are attending universities to continue their education beyond high school,” said Mirzazada. “Where most students in other countries would see studying as a chore, here studying for an exam with friends is what we do for fun.”

Even though there is more available to the younger generation now than in recent years, Mirzazada said because of culture and religion certain things will never change.

“Marriages have always been and probably will always be arranged by the parents,” said Mirzazada. “A man can refuse to marry Farhad Mirzazada (right), college student in Kabul and interpreter for an Afghan construction company, translates messages between a contractor and an Army engineer officer.

the woman his parents choose if he loves someone else, but women don’t really have much say in who they marry.”

Cultural differences aside, Mirzazada said young people in Afghanistan are much like teenagers and young adults everywhere else.

“We like to watch movies, play cards and sports, and hang out with friends just like everyone else,” said Mirzazada. “I love Jean Claude VanDamme’s movies and Jennifer Lopez is one of my favorite music artists. I hope that one day I can go to the states to see what it’s like for teenagers there.”

“We may have different cultures, but all young people want the same things,” said Mirzazada. “To be happy, get a higher education and prosper in life.”

POLICY, from Page 1 — ing that of a 55-year-old National Guardsman who died of a heart attack five days after receiving the smallpox vaccine.

Following the CDC’s recommendation, Col. John Grabenstein, deputy director for military vaccines for the Army’s surgeon general, said the Defense Department is revising its policy for some 500,000 military personnel whom it plans to vaccinate against smallpox.

The military has medically screened vaccine recipients since the program’s beginning, Grabenstein said.

He noted DoD would now take an even closer look at risk factors such as tobacco use, high blood pressure, high cholesterol, diabetes and family history of heart disease before giving the vaccine.

“People with three or more of those conditions would be exempted,” he said. Grabenstein Servicemembers will be immunized under President George W. Bush's directive to inoculate military forces.

cautioned anyone — vaccinated or not — to seek healthcare if they experience chest pain or shortness of breath with exertion.

Military personnel currently receiving the smallpox vaccine are those deployed or deploying to a Central Command area of operation; those who would go into a smallpox outbreak area to help control the disease; and healthcare workers at DoD hospitals and clinics who would treat smallpox patients.

Grabenstein said there is no plan to vaccinate everyone in the military at this time. “It’s a pretty focused and targeted program,” he noted. Even with the public concern over the safety of vaccine, he said the recent deaths seem to be in proportion with usual rates of death.

More than 350,000 service members have been vaccinated, with “the expected number of post-vaccination symptoms and few serious reactions,” he said.

Now, just on-track headaches for Craven

Ricky Craven got out of his car and, within minutes, started complaining.

"I usually don't complain, but ... this teammate thing is ridiculous, it's unbelievable," he said, shaking his head.

"I'm a stand-alone guy out there with no help, and these teammates, it just really, really frustrates me. It's always been an individual sport — one against 42. A lot of these guys I'm referring to are friends of mine, but they don't play this game the right way. It's all about teammates. That is a very disappointing part of this business right now."

Man, what a great day it must have been.

The New England native was a Rookie of the Year in Winston Cup many years back, an up-and-comer with a world of potential. Then, one day, he took a hit.

A hard hit.

His head hurt. His vision failed him. Then, so did his team.

Craven went through what many drivers who suffer hard hits and concussions do in this sport — he found that some of his friends deserted him, many in the sport doubted him, and he was forced to accept the fact that, if he still wanted to make it in this sport, his would be an uphill battle.

But Craven persisted. He bore his knuckles to the ground.

And, now, he's reached a point in his career when he can get out of his car after finishing fourth and talk about the fact that he was capable of finishing higher. And, in truth, he was.

"Today was actually fun," Craven said after Sunday's Aaron's 499 at Talladega Superspeedway.

"I don't remember the last time I said Talladega was fun. At the end of the race we had a piece, and the Tide Pontiac was up front. This is a great team and we're getting better and better, and gaining more and more momentum."

And more and more credibility.

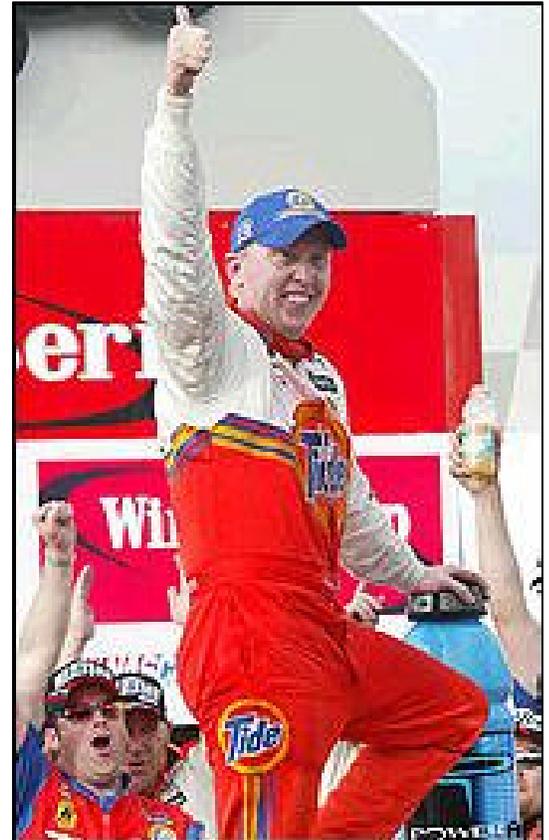

No longer does mention of Craven's name instantly conjure memories of the struggle he went through to come back from a concussion.

Now, NASCAR followers can think of a winner. A two-time winner, actually — putting this year's Darlington Raceway trophy on his mantle next to the one he got from winning at Martinsville Speedway in 2001.

Craven scored a dramatic win at Darlington, S.C., earlier this season.

As the circuit heads to Martinsville this weekend, Craven and team owner Cal Wells are pretty sure they have what it takes to add some more trophies to that collection. It took two years together to get the pieces in place, but this season — despite a switch in manufacturer from Ford to Pontiac — Craven actually appears to be a championship contender.

Those words might sound hasty, since it's only April, 28 events remain, and Craven has never finished better than 15th in the standings.

Ricky Craven celebrates in Victory Lane after winning the Carolina Dodge Dealers 400 .

But he's sixth now, and his cars have been consistently strong this year. Wells attributes the biggest step forward this season to the new engine crew that is providing the No. 32 Pontiac with its power.
